

ABOUT THE SERIES

The EADI Global Development series reflects the multi-disciplinary character of EADI member institutes and the association at large. The series seeks to broaden our understanding of the processes that advance or impede human development, whether from a political, economic, sociological or anthropological perspective. EADI's mission is to inform students of development, international relations, and area studies, the academic and policy research and teaching community, development administration, professional training and practice.

2014 Impact Factor: 0.851

Development research is characterized by its interdisciplinary approach and its interest in a strong link between theory, policy and practice. The series invites book manuscripts emanating from EADI working group activities, EADI conferences and EADI research projects, but is also open to external submissions.
