EADI is a Europe-wide network of institutes, researchers and students of various disciplines in the field of development studies. It organizes activities and offers facilities for the international exchange of knowledge and experience in the professional field. Its most prominent activity is a General Conference devoted to a topical issue every three years.

Guide for EADI members

We promote your publications, calls, courses, videos, podcasts, vacancies and news via our online information services.

EADI Research Monitor
- Find publications by topic and area

EADI Blog
- “Debating Development Research”, contribute to the discussions

Social Media
- EADI on Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn, YouTube, Google+
- Newsfeeds

Education Portal
- Directory of courses and trainings
- Job offers from members

We are very interested in a close dialogue with the communication person in the respective member institute. You can submit your news (jubilees, calls, important events) to the EADI team. Events should be open to EADI members.

Please note that we only announce events which are combined with a call for papers. Books will only be announced when they are freely available online or when they include an open access chapter.
The EADI website and the newsletter are efficient tools for both EADI members and the general public to stay informed about the development research community. They feature news from members and partners and from EADI working groups and programmes. We publish the following categories of information:

- General news on Development Studies and on activities in our network
- Calls for papers and for research projects
- Videos and audios from our network
- Vacancies
- News from premium members of EADI

Our information channels feature publications by members from different perspectives. Our emphasis is on publications which are freely available.

In the Research Monitor section of our website we present a range of publications, opinion papers and policy briefs from our members. It allows search combinations by topics, regions and publication types.

A selection of the publications is included in our fortnightly newsletter.

The EADI Blog is set up as a discussion platform for the international development research community. We invite you to share your opinion, thoughts and insights on everything that might be of interest to the broader community – and of course also on articles that appear on our blog.

Please send us your announcements to editor_enews@eadi.org. We will be happy to publish them on the website, on our blog, in our newsletter and in our social media.

EADI provides media services on Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn, YouTube and Google+. We are also happy to retweet interesting tweets from your institute.

The EADI website features a directory of courses and trainings:

- Graduate Degrees (Bachelor & equivalent)
- Post-Graduate Degrees (Master & equivalent)
- Doctoral Degrees (PhD & equivalent)
- Advanced Training Courses
- MOOCs – Massive Open online Courses
- Other Courses

Members can add new courses and update the information on our website. Please write to devtrain@eadi.org and include a link to the course webpage.
